

Peak 11 Media

Sales Scripts & Sequences

The operator's day-to-day selling toolkit. Built for voice-first selling. Everything here is meant to be said out loud on a live call or pasted straight into an email. Updated June 2026.

How to use this kit

- Blue-bar boxes are what you SAY. Read them out loud, in your own voice. They're written the way real people talk, not the way brochures read.
- The whole offer is risk reversal. You're not selling a website on the call. You're offering to build a free sample, and they only pay if they love it. That single move dissolves most resistance before it starts.
- One CTA per touch. Every call, every email, every text drives to exactly one next step. Never stack asks.
- Sound like a neighbor, not a vendor. Small business owner to small business owner. Curious, low-pressure, quick.

1. The Interest-First Cold Call (primary motion)

This is the workhorse. The goal of the call is NOT to close a sale. The goal is to earn a yes, build me the free sample and walk away with an email or cell to send it to. Keep the whole thing under three minutes.

The opening (first 10 seconds)

Open honest and disarming. Name that you're not here for a hard sell, then get to the point fast. Permission-based, never pushy.

OPEN — say this

"Hey, is this [Name]? This is Nate, I'm a web designer here in Salt Lake. I'm not selling you anything on this call, I'll be quick, promise. I came across [Business] and noticed you guys don't have a website yet / the one you've got looks pretty dated. I build sites for [trade] businesses around the valley. Got 30 seconds?"

The pitch (the free-sample offer)

This is the core move. You remove all their risk. They don't decide whether to buy a website, they only decide whether they're curious enough to let you build one for free.

THE OFFER — say this

"Here's how I work, and it's pretty simple. If you're open to it, I'll build you an actual sample site this week. Real pages, your business, your photos, the whole thing. No charge, no commitment. You look at it, and if you love it, we talk. If you don't, you throw it away and we're good. There's literally no risk on your end. Worth me putting one together for you?"

Why this works

A cold prospect can't say no to free. You've moved the question from "do you want to spend $900" (scary) to "do you want to see something I made for you, free" (easy yes). Price comes AFTER they're emotionally attached to the finished site. Never lead with price.

The portfolio-proof move (text a live demo)

If they hesitate or want proof you're legit, don't argue, show them. Offer to text a live demo of a site you've already built. This is the single best objection-killer you have, because it makes you real and instant.

PROOF — say this

"Totally fair, you don't know me from anyone. Tell you what, what's a good cell? I'll text you a couple of sites I just built for shops like yours right now, while we're on the phone. You can see the quality for yourself, then decide if you want one."

Once they open the link mid-call, you've gone from "random caller" to "the guy who builds these." That's where the free-sample yes gets easy.

Discovery questions (gather the build info)

The second they say yes, switch into friendly intake mode. You need enough to build a real sample. Keep it conversational, not a form. Get the email/cell FIRST, everything else is bonus.

- Best contact — "What's the best email or cell to send it to? I'll have it over in a couple days." (lock this no matter what)
- Services — "What are the main services you want front and center? What do people call you for most?"
- Area — "What areas do you cover? Just [city], or the whole valley?"
- Photos — "Do you have job photos or shots of the shop I can pull from, or should I use clean stock to start?"
- Hours & booking — "Are you appointment-only, walk-in, or both? Want a call button, a quote form, or online booking?"
- Vibe — "Any business whose look you like? Want it clean and modern, or bold and bright?"
- Reviews — "You've got great reviews on Google/Yelp, mind if I pull a few onto the site?"

Always close the loop the same way

End every yes with: "Perfect. I'll build it out and send you the link in a couple days. When I do, it'll come from me, Nate. Take a real look and we'll go from there. Sound good?" Then send the demo text immediately so your number is saved in their phone.

Per-Trade Personalization Hooks

Same call, same offer. Swap the opening hook so it sounds like you actually know their world. One tailored line each, drop it right into the OPEN where it says “noticed you...”. The best hook references their reviews, their years in business, or a specific gap you spotted.

Trade	Tailored opening hook
Roofing	“I saw you've got killer reviews but no real site, and roofing is one of those things people Google at 11pm when their ceiling's leaking. If you're not showing up with a real site, they call the next guy. Let me build you one free and you'll see what I mean.”
Electrician / Contractor	“You're licensed, you've got the reviews, but your only web presence is a Facebook page / a dead link. Homeowners checking out a contractor want to see a real site before they let you in their house. I'll build you one free this week.”
Auto repair / detail / body	“You've got [X] years and a glowing Yelp, but no website, which means anyone who Googles you just sees competitors with sites. For a shop your size that's leaving money on the table. Let me build you a free sample.”
Med spa / salon / nails	“Your Instagram is gorgeous but you're running everything through a booking link, you don't actually own a website. A real site books clients while you sleep and makes you look premium, which matters in this business. I'll build you one free.”
Dental / chiro / PT	“You've got strong reviews but the site looks like it's from 2014 and isn't mobile-friendly, and new patients judge a practice by the website before they ever call. A modern rebuild builds instant trust. Let me make you a free sample.”
Restaurant / cafe / bakery	“People are finding you on DoorDash and Yelp but you don't have your own site with your menu and hours, so you're paying aggregators for traffic you could own. I'll build you a clean menu site free and you'll see the difference.”
Landscaping / fitness / gym	“You do beautiful work / you've built a real community, but there's no website to show it off, just a Facebook page. A real site with a gallery and a quote form / sign-up turns lookers into bookings. Let me build you one free this week.”

2. Objection-Handling Library

Objections aren't rejection, they're requests for more info or a reflex. Stay relaxed. The free-sample offer defuses almost everything, so when in doubt, fall back to "let me just build it free and you decide." Never argue. Agree, reframe, redirect to the free build.

"How much does it cost?"

They say	You say
"How much?" / "What's this gonna run me?"	"$900 flat for the standard build, or $1,200 if you want extra pages. After that it's $49 a month if you want me to host it, keep it updated, and handle any changes. But honestly, don't worry about price yet, you see the whole thing built first and only pay if you actually love it. Let me build it, then we'll talk numbers."

"I already have a website."

They say	You say
"We've already got one."	"Yeah, I actually looked at it, that's part of why I called. [It's not loading right now / it's not mobile-friendly / the design's a few years behind / there's no way for people to contact you on it.] That's exactly the kind of thing I fix. How about this: I rebuild it as a free sample, you put the two side by side, and if mine's not clearly better, you keep yours. Fair?"

Their site being old/broken is a gift, not a wall

"I already have one" is the easiest objection to flip, because you already know it's weak (that's why they're a lead). Name the specific problem you saw. Specificity proves you actually looked and makes you credible instantly.

"I don't need one / I get all my work by word of mouth."

They say	You say
"I don't really need a website, all my business is referrals / word of mouth."	"That's awesome, word of mouth is the best kind of business. But here's the thing: when someone refers you, the first thing that person does now is Google you before they call. If nothing comes up, or something dated does, they hesitate. A site doesn't replace your referrals, it closes them. And since it's free to see, what's the harm in looking?"

"Just send me some info."

They say	You say
"Can you just email me some info?"	"For sure, I'll do you one better, instead of a brochure I'll just build you the actual sample so you can see it, not read about it. What's the best email for that? I'll get it over in a couple days."

“Send me info” is a soft yes — take the email and run

Don't get talked into mailing a PDF nobody reads. Convert it into the build: “instead of info, I'll send the actual site.” Either way you walk away with the email, which is the whole point of the call.

“I'm too busy right now.”

They say	You say
“I'm slammed, I don't have time for this.”	“Totally get it, that's exactly why I do it this way, it takes zero time on your end. I build the whole thing, you just glance at a link when you've got a free minute. No meetings, no homework for you. What's the best email and I'll send it when it's ready?”

“Let me think about it.”

They say	You say
“Let me think about it / call me back.”	“Yeah, of course. And since there's nothing to think about cost-wise yet, let me just build the sample so you've got something real to actually think about. It's free, and it'll make the decision way easier when you're looking at your own site instead of imagining it. What email should I send it to?”

“I have a guy / my nephew does that.”

They say	You say
“My nephew / a buddy is handling it.”	“Nice, that's great you've got someone. Honestly a lot of my clients started that way, the favor just never quite gets finished, or it ends up half-done. No pressure at all. Let me build you a free version, and if your guy delivers something better, awesome, use his. If not, you've got mine ready to go. Worst case you've got options.”

Price pushback (after they've seen it)

They say	You say
“$900's a lot / can you do it cheaper?”	“I hear you. Think of it this way, that's a one-time $900 and the site works for you every day after, basically a salesperson that never sleeps. One extra job a year more than covers it. And the $49 a month is optional, it just means you never have to touch it, I keep it live and handle changes. If $900 up front is the hurdle, I can split it, half now, half when it goes live. Want to do that?”

Hold your price — you've already proven the value

By the time price comes up, they've seen a finished site with their name on it. You don't need to discount, you need to anchor it against ONE job's value and offer a payment split, not a lower price. Discounting cheapens the work and trains them to push.

3. The Show-and-Close Call (after the site is built)

This is the money call. They said yes to the free sample, you built it, now you walk them through it and close. Call them, don't just email the link cold, the walk-through is where the sale happens. Have the demo open on your screen and theirs.

Open the call

OPEN — say this

"Hey [Name], it's Nate, the web designer, I built that sample site for [Business]. You got a couple minutes? I just sent the link to your [email/phone], can you pull it up real quick? I want to walk you through it."

The walk-through flow

Don't narrate every pixel. Hit the emotional high points, then let it breathe. Guide their eyes to the parts that make them go "whoa."

- Top / hero — "So right up top, there's your name, what you do, and a big call/book button so customers reach you in one tap. That's the first thing anyone sees."
- Services — "Scroll down, these are your main services laid out clean. Anyone landing here knows exactly what you do in five seconds."
- Proof — "Then here, I pulled your actual Google reviews in. Those 4.8 stars are now working for you the second someone lands on the page."
- Photos / gallery — "This is your work / your shop. People buy with their eyes, especially in your business."
- Contact / mobile — "And it's fully mobile, here, shrink your browser, watch it reflow. Most of your customers are on their phone, so this matters. Quote form right here, goes straight to your inbox."
- Then stop talking. "So, what do you think?" Let them react. Silence sells.

The close ("your reviews are great but your site was broken")

Once they react positively, bridge straight from the emotion to the close. Contrast where they were with where they are now.

THE CLOSE — say this

"Here's the honest truth, [Name]. You've got [4.8 stars / 24 years / an amazing reputation], but online you had [no site at all / a broken link / something stuck in 2014]. So all that reputation wasn't doing anything for you on the internet. This fixes that. Everything you've earned offline finally shows up when people search you."

"It's $900 to make it yours and put it live, and then $49 a month and I host it, keep it secure, and handle any changes you want, you never have to think about it. I can have you live by [day]. Want me to get it going?"

Then go quiet and let them answer

After “want me to get it going?” — stop. Do not fill the silence. The first person to talk loses. If they say yes, move straight to locking payment. If they hesitate, it's a real objection, go to the Section 2 library (almost always price or “let me think”).

Lock payment + next step

Make paying frictionless. You're voice-only, so you send a link, never ask them to read card numbers aloud. Get a verbal yes, then text/email the Stripe link while you're still on the phone.

LOCK IT — say this

“Awesome, you're gonna love having this. Easiest thing: I'll text you a secure payment link right now, you can do the $900 on there, or we split it half-and-half if you'd rather. The second it's in, I point your domain at it and we're live, I'll have you up by [day]. Sending that link over now, go ahead and tap it whenever you've got a sec. And welcome aboard.”

“Real quick so I can finish it up, are we keeping your current domain name or do you want me to grab a new one for you?”

- Send the Stripe link on the call while urgency is hot. Don't “follow up tomorrow.”
- Offer the split ($450 now / $450 at launch) the instant price is the only thing in the way.
- Confirm the next step out loud — the launch day and the domain plan, so they hang up feeling it's already happening.
- If they can't pay this second: “No problem, I'll text you the link, it stays open. Want me to hold your launch spot for [day]?” Then follow up same day.

4. Cold Email Sequence (3 touches)

Humanized, plain-text, sent from a real personal Gmail (display name “Nate — Peak 11 Media”). Reads like a note from a neighbor, not a marketing blast. Rules baked in: lowercase casual subject lines, 40–80 words, one CTA, no jargon, no em-dashes, no images or tracking pixels. Personalize the bracketed bits per business.

Cadence

Touch 1 = day 0. Touch 2 = day 3. Touch 3 = day 7. Stop after touch 3, no exceptions. If they reply at any point, drop the sequence and go human. Pair sends with your call block so email + call hit the same morning.

Touch 1 — day 0 (hook + free build offer)

subject: quick question about [business]

hey [name],

i'm a web designer here in salt lake. came across [business] and noticed you don't have a website yet / the one you've got isn't really loading. you've clearly got the reputation [the reviews are great], it's just not showing up online.

i build sites for [trade] shops around the valley. if you're open to it i'll put together a free sample for you this week, no charge, no commitment. you look at it and only keep it if you love it.

want me to build one?

nate

Touch 2 — day 3 (different angle: proof)

subject: built a couple of these recently hey [name], following up on my note from the other day.

figured instead of just telling you, i'd show you. here are a couple sites i built recently for shops like yours:

[demo link]

that's the kind of thing i'd make for [business], free, so you can see it before deciding anything. takes me a couple days.

just reply with a yes and i'll get started.

nate

Touch 3 — day 7 (soft last touch) subject: i'll leave you alone after this hey [name], last note from me, i don't want to be a pest.

the free sample offer stands if you ever want it. no catch, you only pay if you love what i make. if now's not the time, no worries at all, just reply and tell me to close the file.

either way, wishing [business] a great summer.

nate

CAN-SPAM footer (every email, every touch)

Append this to all three. A working opt-out and a real physical address are legally required. Keep it lowercase and human so it doesn't break the personal-note feel.

if you'd rather not hear from me, just reply stop and i won't message you again.

Peak 11 Media · 5330 S Riley Ln, Murray, UT 84107

- Honor opt-outs immediately — anyone who replies “stop” goes on a suppression list and is never emailed again, across all batches.
- No false subject lines, no deception — subjects must reflect the actual content.
- Plain text, unique wording per email — avoids Gmail bulk-similarity filters and keeps deliverability high.
- Max 20–30 sends/day from the warmed Gmail; spread 2–3 per hour, 9am–3pm MT, Tue/Wed/Thu best.

5. SMS Rules + Templates

THE ONE UNBREAKABLE RULE: never cold-text.

A text may only be sent to a number the prospect verbally gave you on a call, for the express purpose of sending what they asked for (the demo or payment link). No exceptions. Cold texting is a TCPA violation that carries $500–$1,500 in statutory damages PER message. We do not do it, ever.

How consent gets captured (always on a call, in their words)

GET CONSENT — say this on the call

"What's the best number to text the link to? I'll send it right over so you've got it."

"Cool, I'll text you the demo / the payment link right now from this number, [Name]."

That request-and-agree is the consent. They asked you to text them something specific. Send only that, and keep it tied to the conversation you just had.

TCPA-safe texting rules

- Consent first, every time — only text a number the person gave you on a call for this purpose. Verbal yes on a recorded/noted call is your record.
- Stay on-topic — send only what they asked for (demo link, payment link, the thing you discussed). No surprise pitches.
- Identify yourself — every text says who you are, so it never reads as spam.
- Honor STOP instantly — if anyone replies stop, you stop, and the number goes on the no-text list.
- Business hours only — 8am–9pm their local time. Never nights, never weekends-early.
- Never buy or scrape numbers for texting — the lead-list phone numbers are for CALLS only, never cold texts.

Templates (only after consent on a call)

DEMO LINK (right after they say yes on the call)

"Hey [Name], it's Nate (the web designer we just talked to). Here are those sample sites I mentioned: [demo link]. I'll build one like this for [Business] free this week and send it over. Talk soon."

"HERE'S YOUR SAMPLE" (when their build is ready)

"Hey [Name], Nate here, your sample site for [Business] is ready: [link]. Take a look when you get a sec and I'll give you a quick call to walk through it. No rush."

PAYMENT LINK (on the close call, after a verbal yes)

"Hey [Name], it's Nate, great talking just now. Here's the secure payment link to get [Business] live: [Stripe link]. $900, or tap the split option for half now. Soon as it's in I'll point your domain and we're live. Welcome aboard."

6. Voicemail Script

Most calls go to voicemail. The job of a voicemail is NOT to pitch, it's to spark enough curiosity that they call back, or at least recognize your name and pick up when you try again. Keep it under 20 seconds, sound relaxed, and always leave your number twice, slowly.

VOICEMAIL — say this

"Hey [Name], it's Nate, I'm a web designer here in Salt Lake. I was actually looking at [Business] and put together a quick idea for your website, wanted to run it by you. Nothing salesy, two-minute thing. Give me a call back when you get a sec, it's [number]. Again that's Nate, [number]. Thanks [Name], talk soon."

Voicemail do's and don'ts

DO: sound like a real local guy who already did some work for them ("put together a quick idea") — that curiosity drives callbacks. DON'T: say the word "website design services," pitch price, or ramble. The goal is a callback or a warm pickup next time, nothing more.

Follow-up rhythm: if no callback, try again in 2–3 days at a different time of day. Pair with the day-0 / day-3 / day-7 email sequence so your name shows up in two places, which is what eventually earns the pickup.

Peak 11 Media — internal sales toolkit. Custom websites for local small businesses across the Wasatch Front. The whole motion is risk reversal: build it free, they only pay when they love it. Contact: consciousmirage@gmail.com · Peak 11 Media, 5330 S Riley Ln, Murray, UT 84107.